Board and Executive Succession Planning

“The need for careful planning of board succession is greater today in light of aging boards, pressure from shareholders, rating agencies, governance watchdogs and regulators, and the demand for diversity and a broader set of skills to support changes in company strategies in a dynamic environment.” – Spencer Stuart

Besides the need to manage their own succession, boards play a primary role in CEO succession planning while at the executive level, the CEO's role revolves around driving management succession at senior levels, and ensuring that the organization is developing succession-ready executives for all senior roles.
